No Place Like Home.

LONDON, March 1 .- Sam Kaplan and Aaron Feinstein, New York diamond merchants, were on board the Zeeland line steamship Mecklenburg when that ressel was sunk by striking a mine on Sunday while bound for Rotterdam. The two men drifted about in a small boat for some hours before they were rescued by the Holland-America liner Westerdijk. They have returned to London and propose to take the next trans atlantic liner for home, abandoning heir Rotterdam enterprise,

"The Heart of Wetona" Has a Human Beat BY CHARLES DARNTON

O LD as you may be in the practice of playgoing, you are probably still susceptible to the call of the wild and still susceptible to the call of the wild and still young to the lure of the West as it spread itself in the spacious times of flowering imagina-Well, then, make the most of "The Heart of Wetona," which 'opened" last night at the Lyceum Theatre, for plays with Indians in them may end with our latest subway.

At any rate, sentiment may make "The Heart of Wetona" the last so-called Charles Frohman-David Belasco production. It is enough to lasco production. It is enough to say, perhaps, that the touch of Belasco was felt throughout George Scarborough's play. Belasco knows ing the country this winter has found many victims whose physical condition made it easy for this dread disease to get in its deadly work.

The number of deaths for which the Grip germ is directly responsible is more.

At any rate, sentiment may make for the last so-called Charles Frohman-David Belasco production. It is enough to say, perhaps, that the touch of Belasco knows brought to a full stop with a bullet. say, perhape, that the touch of Belasco was felt throughout George Scarborough's play. Belasco knows his West, and with it that girl of golden talent, Blanche Bates, who opened her intelligent eyes to last night's interesting proceedings. Throughout every scene the influence of Belasco was felt, and most of all the man who loved her deeply faced each other in a more or less man-to-fit man talk. It was this scene that gave the play the tight, human grip of "Arizona," with which Augustus Thomas first pointed out the intimate dangers of a remote army post.

In "The Heart of Weiona" it is still the struggle of sex that commands interest. And, after all, this is the only real struggle known to mankind. Wars may come and wars may pass, but the battle of sex goes, on forever. Belasco -coognizes this of orever. Belasco -coognizes this of the man who knows the battle of sex goes, on forever. Belasco -coognizes this of the struggle and services of the shore of the shore of the shore of the hother which can induce and preserve the eyes of infant or aged. Get at the root of your ailments-clear your of the Comanches, rides out into the digestive system of impur- prairie one afternoon with the son of the post chaplain and then waits for the irresponsible youth to marry her. Chief Quannah immediately takes to the war path and hits upon John Hardin, an Indian agent, who sincerely loves Wetona, as the guilty man. To save Wetona from disgrace, Hardin marries her, and then puts her to the test of having her lover as a guest in his house over They act promptly on the night, while he remains awake at his stomach, liver and bowels, removing waste matters and pu- leaves her room to knock at Wella's rifying the blood. Not habit door, but her only purpose is to talk leaves her room to knock at Wells's with him; and in the course of this talk she discovers that he is unworthy of her love. If this sounds a bit dull, discreet and conventional, bit dull, discreet and conventional, please remember that a situation of this kind cannot easily be put into print. The upshot of the whole affair is that young Wells is shot by Indians as he abruptly terminates his week-end visit, whereupon Wetona looks up to the strong-hearted Hardin and in her simple way tells him that she's "much obliged" to him for having made himself her husband. That's the story without Indian feathers or other trimmings.

Excellent acting brought "The Heart of Wetona" close to the heart of the audience. First of all, William of the audience. First of all, William Courtleigh as the towering, sinister Quannah, chief of the Comanches, was splendid. From any point of view—southern or northern lights—he remains the best Indian on the American stage. Although Lenore Ulrich seemed to have caught the Hawalian accent and direct manner employed by Laurette Taylor in "The fiird of Paradise," she gave a simple, appealing performance and won further admiration by investing Wetona with more personal charm than might ordinarily be credited to an Indian princess. John Miltern kept a firm grasp on the part of the steadand attractive one that the mothers will be glad to realize now fashionable it is. This pretty litie model is smocked at the neck and again at the waist line. The labor is very slight, yet the effect is that of elaboration. As it is shown here, the dress is made of white lines, the trimming is blue and the smocking is worked in blue thread. It makes a very pretty effect and a very dainty little frock with little cost and little labor, but the same idea could be carried out in a variety of materials. For the dressy freck taffets would be cretty and for the simple freck any one of the dainty washable materials could be used, or, if liked, a heavier material could be used for the gress itself with a lighter one for the front material could be used for the gress itself with a lighter one for the front portion that is smocked, as a pique with handkerchief lawn. The dress proper is arranged with a box platt at each front edge and the centre portion is attached under these box platts. Beneath the left side the closing is made. A pretty feature is the way in which the belt is arranged, passing over the box plaits at the front and under them at the back. Either short sleeves or long sleeves may be used, if the smocking seems to represent too great a kabor, plain shirrings can be substituted, but few mothers will object to the extra stitches, and the smocking certainly gives a touch of smartness not to be found in the material to be found in the material seems, and dresses such as this are in demand dresses such as this are in demand throughout the entire summer. For the 10 year size will be needed a yards of material 56 inches wide, or 11g yards 44, with 18g of a yard 26 nches wide for the trimming. The settern No. 8953 is cut in sizes for stills from 8 to 12 years of age.
